FOREWORD

Towards the close of the 18th and through the first quarter of the 19th centuries, portraiture flourished in France, England and America. It became the vogue to sit to Nattier and Largilliere, to Le Brun, Rigaud, and their contemporaries in France ; to Gainsborough, Reynolds, Romney, Raeburn, Hoppner, Lawrence, Lely, and lesser men, in England ; and to Stewart, Copley, the Peales, and later to Inman, Jarvis, Jouitt, Sully, and others, in America. In consequence, the ancestral portrait gives to the old homes of all these countries, a unique charm and distinction, which the present generation cherishes with justifiable pride, and values as a priceless heritage.

The last quarter of the 19th century witnessed a revival of appreciation of portraiture as the highest form and expression of painting, and following the traditions of their ancestors, many in our day have perpetuated themselves in portraiture, to leave to their descendants, in turn, a similar legacy.

The present exhibition of the portraits of seventeen well-known Americans and Europeans is thoroughly representative of the individual style and characteristics of the famous artists of whose works it is composed, and affords the lover of the beautiful in art a favorable opportunity for comparative study.

The admission fees of the Exhibition will be given to the Junior League for the benefit of the Music School Settlement, where the youth of the East Side of our city are offered a free musical education. It seems eminently fitting that through this display of the art of painting, the allied art of music should be aided and encouraged.

To the courtesy and kindness of the following patrons, who have loaned portraits, the scope, beauty and interest of this exhibition are due.
